

Brazil, Russia And India Offer The Best Opportunities In The Musculoskeletal Drugs Markets To 2020

LONDON, GREATER LONDON, UK, October 13, 2017 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Three of the BRICs (Brazil, Russia and India) have high recent and forecast market growth rates for musculoskeletal drugs and so will move up the table of consumer countries for these drugs. Currently the largest markets for drugs that treat diseases such as arthritis, osteoporosis, osteomalacia, carpal tunnel syndrome and muscular dystrophy are in countries such as the USA and Japan and China; the USA's market is and will remain vastly bigger than any other, but the three BRIC markets are beginning to catch up with Japan and China. For example, while India's market was only two-thirds of Japan's in 2016, by 2020 its sales will be equal to 84% of the Japanese sales. Again, Again, Brazil's market was only half as big as China's in 2016 but will be worth nearly 60% of that market by 2020.

Many musculoskeletal disorders are incurable so that patients will take these pain- and inflammation-reducing drugs either continuously or periodically for life. As their incidence is age-related, the increase in the size of the aging population is one factor driving the growth of this market. Other factors are increasing global obesity and stress levels.

Globally, the market for musculoskeletal drugs equates to about 14% of the pharma total and is growing at over 7% year on year. This compares with growth rates around 5% for pharmaceuticals in general. The benefits of growth in these markets will be widely distributed. Although the leading manufacturers of these drugs are the Swiss company Hoffmann-La Roche, the British GlaxoSmithKline and the USA's Pfizer, the top ten pharma companies together only account for around 10% of global sales. Small pharma companies in the emerging economies and generic drugs account for the majority of sales of these products.
