Introduction of polyethylene waxes in the market uncovered a series of new applications and initiated the necessity of detailed recognition of their properties. Polyethylene wax is manufactured by polymerization of ethylene, a derivative of crude oil. The process of polymerization of ethylene is significant as level of polymerization affects the physical properties of polyethylene wax.

PE Wax is polyethylene homopolymer wax, applied as a consistent ingredient for end formulations to improve product appearance and high thermal properties for a wide range of industries, including PVC, colour masterbatches, rubber and textiles. Global PE wax manufacturers have established several polymerization processes to produce wax with desired properties. Moreover, addition of polyethylene wax to hydrocarbon waxes increases the melting points to a marked degree.
