About Instructor-led Language Training

The global instructor-led language training market by classroom-based learning is traditionally the most dominant. This is because classroom-based learning is used by many language training vendors for knowledge transfer. The major factor contributing to the growth of the market is the increased demand from the institutional sector, more prominently from the corporate sector. The global language learning market consists of three modes of delivery that includes online, classroom-based, and blended. Classroom-based language learning is the most dominant form of delivery. It is widely practiced in many developed and developing countries. However, owing to the digitization of education and content, the online language learning is gaining traction in the market. In addition, this method can be expected to be mainstream at the end of the forecast period. Although there are a plethora of massive open online courses (MOOCs) courses available for language learning, serious learners will invest time and efforts in credible language learning courses. The content available on MOOCs is only for reference purposes.

Technavio's analysts forecast the global instructor-led language training market to grow at a CAGR of 19.85% during the period 2017-2021.
