Growth of the equipment and machinery industry is directly proportional to the capital investment of end-use sectors. Rapid industrialization and economic upturn in the global economy have translated into huge demand within the industry. Although the equipment and machinery sector is a truly global space, the US is the dominant force. It is the largest market for machinery and is counted among the top suppliers in the world. Additionally, the region is actively involved in advanced research pertaining to engineering and scientific disciplines that aid the equipment and machinery industry. Growth in end-use industries in the region such as energy & power, construction, food & beverage, and others can be credited for the growth of the industry in the region. With developing nations such as China and India reaching the brim of industrialization, the consumption of machinery is rising exponentially.
