/EINPresswire.com/ -- All alcoholic beverages which have their ethanol

level increased beyond what was present in the original fermented mixture are called distilled spirits. Alcohol has a boiling point of 78.5 °C and water has a boiling point of 100 °C. When a liquid that contains ethanol is heated to a temperature that is higher than 78.5 °C but less than 100 °C there are vapours emitted. When these vapours which are emitted are condensed they form a condensate. This condensate will have a higher alcohol content than the original liquid.

Any drink that contains ethanol which is a byproduct of the fermentation process is called an alcoholic beverage. Alcoholic Spirits are distilled alcoholic drinks that are unsweetened and have an Alcohol by Volume content of 20% or more. Of all the liquids that are products of the yeast fermentation process, spirits tend to have the highest ABV (alcohol by volume). However, in order for spirits to become stronger another step is performed to further fortify various types of spirits. This a process called distillation.
