The decision of the European Commission to reduce carbon footprint is encouraging biofuel adaptation in the industry. The report claimed that the initiative by EC would have a larger impact on the Aircraft Fuel industry and termed it as a trend setter.

A study suggests that the industry is expected to show a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 1.6% during the 2019-2025 period. The study also revealed that in terms of market size, the global Aircraft Fuel industry would reach 954 million USD by 2025. Currently, the market stands at 869 million USD.

Air travel used to be expensive and only accessible by the upper class of society. But during last decade, the industry got a much-needed push to break the barrier. As a result, the number of air travelers estimated to increase by 75% between 2005 to 2016. Emerging countries like China and India are performing exceptionally well in this sector owing to the increasing demand for air travel. As a result, service providers are upgrading their existing aircraft and rapidly buying new aircraft to address the increasing demand.
