Market Overview:

The electronic ticket machine is designed to dispense tickets, either in paper or electronic form, upon the payment, which could be in cash or by payment cards. While the older versions of machines produced only paper tickets and took cash in fixed denomination notes or currency coins, the modern variants have features, such as online payments and can provide electronic tickets that are loaded directly onto the user's smartcard or smartphone. Also called automatic ticket vending machines (ATVM), these are commonly used in stations for trams, trains and metros.

With the main function being the dispensing of tickets, modern ticket machine are also capable of other advanced functions, such as making recharges for smartcards and mobile wallets. These are also equipped with POS card payments and online transaction options to make transactions easier. They have a display unit and a user interface for the user to be able to select his or her options. Ticket machines are mainly installed to ease the process of ticket vending and manage crowds at ticket counters.

The increased digitization of all payments and transactions has seen the segment of the market with products that are compatible with mobile and online transactions and support smartcards witness a huge surge in demand. Most countries, developed and developing nations, are looking to equip public transport station with these machines. The demand for ticket machines also arises from the commercial and entertainment sectors.
