The partnership creates a simplified solution for youth sports administrators, who may struggle with the administrative burden of risk management. Many in this role are volunteers or board members with limited time, but in working with SportsEngine and InjureFree, league admins now have access to streamlined communications and processes surrounding all aspects of risk management in youth sports starting with incident reporting.

“Helping to ensure the safety of youth athletes, on and off the field, and simplifying the lives of parents, coaches and league admins through our solutions are two of our highest priorities at SportsEngine,” stated Brett MacKinnon, SVP and General Manager, SportsEngine. “We’re excited to partner with InjureFree, and together expand the tools and services available to youth sports organizations to help them manage their safety programs.”

InjureFree is a trusted partner for large NGBs, state-level associations, and school districts. Parents, athletic trainers, and organizational administrators for a myriad of teams appreciate InjureFree’s simplistic interface in reporting injury incidents, while medical advisory committees and insurance providers access the robust dashboards aggregated in real-time.

“As a former coach, high school athletic director, and now parent, making it easy to do the right thing has been a constant focus within our product development,” stated Charlie Wund, InjureFree CEO. “Software should be easy to use, and produce powerful results. We continue to listen to our partner organizations and end-users because we feel providing a valuable service and providing a software that is user-friendly are both of critical importance. We are extremely excited to partner with SportsEngine, to elevate child safety in sports.”

The combined efforts provide organizations a complete risk management solution - from background checks, state and federal compliance tracking, to injury incident reporting, daily COVID-19 symptom monitoring, and more. Organizations will have the opportunity to adopt a full safety program or choose from an a-la-cartè menu of options.
