Self-managed superannuation funds have exploded in popularity in recent years in Australia thanks in part to the fact that owners of the funds, have greater control over the range of investments, any ongoing management fees, and perhaps most importantly of all the amount of tax payable.

we are always focused on delivering outstanding value for our clients”

However, the negative aspect of Self-Managed Superannuation funds is that they come with added responsibilities. In order to take maximum advantage of the tax benefits investors need to be aware of and alter their strategy as soon as any superannuation law changes come into effect. Another huge benefit is the ability that these type of funds provide to enable families to transfer wealth between generations. Some of these benefits may not be available via conventional superannuation products.

However, in order to maximise all of the benefits that Self-Managed Superannuation Funds deliver, it is best to utilise the services of a company whose primary focus is on managing and understanding these types of funds. The cost of utilising these type of services is minuscule compared to the potential savings, that can be obtained.

“At R A Veitch we are always focused on delivering outstanding value for our clients, and in many ways the term Self-managed Superannuation funds may give customers the wrong idea,” said Robert Veitch. “Although customers have a lot more choices than standard off the shelf superannuation products, there are a lot of technicalities involved that could potentially lead to people making back choices, or not taking full advantage of any tax changes. That is why we are advising all of our clients to speak to a professional company regularly to ensure that they are maximising the benefits of their individual plan.”
