PUNE, MAHARASHTRA, INDIA, October 17, 2019 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Tahini Industry

Description

Tahini, a Middle Eastern contribution to the world of food, is a delicious calcium-rich dip or paste made of Sesame seeds. It is a part of ethnic Mediterranean cuisine from Greece, North Africa, and Turk. Tahini is rich in fibers, Calcium, Vitamin B1, Phosphorus, Magnesium and is the main ingredient in many ethnic dishes like Baba Ghanouji, Hummus, Falafel Pitas, and as a base for many sauces and spreads, halva and other sweets. There are many other interesting uses too like, salad dressings, topping for meat and vegetables, breakfast foods, sports drinks like milkshakes to name a few. There are many available forms of Tahini worldwide, mostly Tahini based sauces.

The main ingredient of Tahini is Sesame seeds and depending on the way the seed is used there are two varieties of Tahini – Hulled and Unhulled. Tahini is basically lightly roasted, stone-ground, blended and bottled. Some companies also machine grind it, however, stone-ground one is tastier variety. The production price of Tahini highly depends on Sesame seed production and its market price. The United States depends on the import of Sesame seeds from other countries as the native production is low.

The market research report by the publishers QYResearch Group studied the Global Tahini Market for the forecast period 2019-2025. Middle East countries are the natural market leaders in consumption in this segment. However, production-wise there are no market dominators as there are many Tahini manufacturers across the world. The market for Tahini as a producer and consumer both has been found to be spread across countries in North America, Europe, China North Africa, the Middle East, and Japan.
