Introduction

Global Gin Market

Gin was invented when an experiment was conducted to create remedy for kidney problems. A doctor has combined juniper berries with alcohol. It refers to a distilled alcoholic drink that can be redistilled with fruits, seeds, and grains within other sources of sugar to add flavor. Gin is a drink that has alcoholic properties and categorized under the spirit industry. Different types of gin have different methods of preparation. These manufacturing processes include post-distilled gin, column distilled gin, compound gin.

Gin is currently popularly served in cocktails and predominantly flavor of Juniper. It is a popular spirit across the world with flavors from the botanicals such as orange, and lemon peel. Its alcohol by volume (ABV) ranges from 36 to 50%. When gin is used in moderation, it has various medicinal properties that aid in fighting several illnesses and aches such as arthritis, lung congestion, cough, and water retention. The global gin market is estimated to grow at an impressive pace over the forecast period, as per the report. This can be owed to ascension in the number of bars and restaurants across the globe.

Other factors supplementing to the growth of the gin market include a steep rise in the demand for premium beverages across the globe and easier availability of alcoholic beverages owing to the proliferation of organized retailing and pubs, clubs, and resto-bars. These organized retailers have witnessed faster growth over the world, owing to the establishment of supermarkets, hypermarkets, and specialty stores. Large organized retailers primarily sell ready-to-eat foods and alcoholic beverages, and vendors in the market are dependent on such organized retailers. The increasing popularity of organized retailers worldwide will drive the global gin market. Further, rising popularity in the middle and high income groups is also fostering market growth for gin.
