One thing that the consumer goods industry has learned about the consumers is the current age buyers value sustainability in the goods they buy and values transparency in business operations. It is not just enough for a manufacturer in simply slapping the components list or nutritional information on the product label. Rather consumers are likely to push manufacturers towards raw materials for the goods they sell that are more sustainable. This also comprises the packaging of the product that buyers expect in being compostable, recyclable, and sustainable within minimal carbon footprint.
