The most common furniture found in hospitals, patient's test area, therapy centers, and physician offices is recliners. Patient recliners play a vital role in various treatments procedures that the doctors perform for their patients. These recliners provide comfort and consume less space due to their compact design. Nowadays, patients seek comfort. Thus, keeping this in mind, there are different types of recliners available in the market with different features and functionalities, such as Steelcase's Empath recliner that is particularly designed to reduce stress and potential injuries both for patients and clinicians. The growing aging population is also a major driver propelling the global patient recliner market. According to the World Health Organization, by 2050, a total of 2 billion of the world's population would be aged 60 years and above.
