The halal food market consists of sales of halal food by entities (organizations, sole traders, and partnerships) that meet Islamic standards of food. Halal food is free from ingredients that Muslims are restricted to eat according to law or food that is processed manufactured or stored in vessels that are clean enough according to Islamic laws. Halal food is safer to eat, more ethical, less prone to meat contamination, and improves metabolism as this food is free of pork, alcohol/intoxicants, poisons, and unhygienic content.

Global Halal Food Market Trends

Technological advancements in halal food items are key trends gaining popularity in the Halal market. With the increasing demand for halal foods, halal laboratories are actively engaged in the food safety, analysis of food products for maintaining quality standards to detect the presence of porcine material or alcohol, blockchain, and the Internet of things (IoT) are the technological advancements that strengthen the market.
