The manual process of software license allocation is highly prone to errors and has overwriting challenges. Adding more, license availability also becomes a bottleneck. Keeping all these in mind, OpenLM has put forward a unique solution that would eliminate all these challenges and automate the entire license allocation system.

Virtual License Manager by OpenLM (<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=fbWuAYRtgRQ>) is a service that enables IT, managers, to allocate and manage all their software licenses smartly and dynamically. In simple words, VLM converts all your static licenses into dynamic licenses that can be consumed basis the requirement. VLM helps IT admins allocate software licenses more efficiently without any creating overwriting issues or denials.

VLM sits atop the physical license manager layer and creates license packages that can be allocated to the different teams as per the requirement. For example, if any of the teams in an organization require an additional number of licenses, the system would search for idle license packages in the virtual layer and assign the required number of licenses to the concerned team.

This will automate the entire process of license allocation while utilizing free or idle licenses. Thus, VLM also helps organizations to stay compliant while converting all their static licenses into dynamic licenses. VLM truly does the virtualization of license servers locally, and globally based on organizational requirements.
