It allows for more control over what type of hardware and software might work best for business needs—in addition to accessing more resources than shared hosting plans allow!

Monthly Billing vs. Rental

A rental plan is more flexible and less expensive than a monthly billing plan. If you are still determining how much business will grow, or if you need to scale up in the future, then renting may be an option.
On the other hand, if the company has been around for years and knows exactly what it needs from its hosting server service—and could even afford to pay upfront for this kind of stability—then paying month-by-month would be beneficial.

How do you know what kind of Server you need for business or home?

You have many options when choosing a server for business or home. You can use a cloud-based solution to access a shared hosting server. This type of solution is great if you don't need direct control over the hardware and software running on the Server.
Alternatively, you can opt for dedicated servers locked down so that only one user has access at any time. The main benefit here is that there's no risk of other people using up resources because they're not sharing with anyone else who uses that machine too!

There are many other types of servers, but these are the two main options you have to choose from. The type you select will depend on the needs of the business or home network and how much direct control over the hardware and software you want to have.
