The automotive fabric market consists of sales of automotive fabrics by entities (organizations, sole traders, and partnerships) that refer to textiles used in the automotive industry to manufacture upholstery and interiors of vehicles. These automotive fabrics are woven or nonwoven, coated or composite in nature. The primary goal of these fabrics is to provide maximum comfort, safety, and security to passengers while driving. It includes a wide range of product lines, emphasizing the importance of lowering operational costs.

Global Automotive Fabric Market Trends

The emergence of recycled fabrics has emerged as a key trend gaining popularity in the automotive fabric industry. The recycled fabrics are made from waste material, reprocessed into new fibers and spun into fabric material. The growing environmental concerns about the negative impact of waste incineration, heavy industrial discharges from textile mills, and raw material depletion have transformed the market towards sustainable materials. For instance, in November 2020, Autoneum Holding AG, a Europe-based manufacturer of in-vehicle acoustic and thermal insulation for vehicles, introduced Relive-1. This innovative tufted carpet meets the most stringent requirements for sustainable mobility. These Relive-1 carpets sustainably make use of raw materials. The carpet yarns are made entirely of recycled PET bottles. Autoneum recycles this raw material to produce high-quality carpet systems from recycled PET bottles for upcoming vehicle generations, preserving natural resources and lowering plastic waste.
