

Backyard Farming: an Urban Food Revolution

Frustrated by rising food costs and supply chain disruptions, urban families are digging up their backyards and planting vegetable gardens and fruit trees.

WALNUT CREEK, OHIO, UNITED STATES, May 23, 2023 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Frustrated by rising food costs and supply chain disruptions, a growing number of urban families are digging up their backyards and planting vegetable gardens and fruit trees. These new converts to “micro-homesteading” are learning that peace of mind and healthy food are not difficult to achieve. Who needs an expensive lawn when you can fill your refrigerator with wholesome food... right from your backyard? Its easier than you think.

Joel Salatin, nationally-renowned expert on organic farming, calls it a

“homesteading tsunami”. Salatin and other key influencers will address thousands of families on how to grow and preserve food, at the Food Independence Festival, June 21 and 22, Amish Country Ohio. The premiere of this event last year brought nearly 4000 attendees from across the US.

Farms and food production should be at least as important as who pierced their navel in Hollywood this week.”
