integration, advanced algorithms, and AI to significantly improve the quality and efficiency of preventive healthcare. It addresses the challenging reality that primary care physicians face in delivering guideline-recommended care within practical time constraints, aiming to alleviate these burdens and close the care gap in underserved communities.

Dr. Andres Jimenez, Bronx born and esteemed alumni of Dartmouth, Brown, and Cornell, brings his unique blend of medical expertise and technological acumen to the forefront of the HealthPrevent360 initiative. "Launching in the Bronx holds a special significance for me – it's not just the place where I was born, but also where my journey to make a tangible impact on healthcare continued for almost two decades by mentoring hundreds of premed high school students” says Dr. Jimenez. With a proven track record in disease prevention and behavior change, Dr. Jimenez's vision for HealthPrevent360 is to create a scalable solution that addresses the pressing healthcare needs of many underserved communities.

“Underserved, can also include populations with unique needs requiring a personalized approach to prevention such as law enforcement, who compared to the US general population, suffer disproportionately from cancer and chronic disease such as heart disease, diabetes, stress, depression, sleep disorders, and suicide. Soldiers experience unique occupational hazards related to deployments, such as exposure to fuels that carry unique long-term health risks as well. Adolescents in college, are heavily exposed to risks involving sex, alcohol, and drugs, greatly impacting biological and mental health, sometimes amplified by underlying adverse childhood events. There are also adolescents in High School, who we have witnessed first-hand through our STEM programs, that can become change agents for better health in their home, amongst peers and in their communities. Only by expanding the scope of prevention and leveraging the latest technologies can we hope to change the trajectory of preventive care in this nation.”
