Clinical chemistry is the area of clinical pathology that deals with the analysis and evaluation of body fluids, which are useful in the diagnosis and therapeutics of diseases. They are used for testing the metabolic functions to detect diseases such as diabetes and drugs-of-abuse testing. Clinical analyzers are automated devices that use mechanisms such as ion-selective potentiometry, latex agglutination, and photometric & colorimetric testing to analyze the body fluids such as blood serum, plasma, and urine. Some of the clinical analyzers available in the market are benchtop analyzers and compact bedside models, usually with fewer test options and high-throughput floor-based units.
