Soapy's innovative technology, which utilizes smart handwashing stations to ensure compliance with hand hygiene protocols, will be integrated into PA-DOH's comprehensive training program.

These stations provide real-time feedback, ensuring that healthcare professionals can achieve and maintain the highest standards of hand hygiene.

Emily Magee, a Healthcare-Associated Infection Prevention Specialist with the PA_DOH, expressed her enthusiasm for the partnership:

"Hand hygiene is one of the most simple and effective ways to prevent germ spread, yet we know facilities continue to struggle with low hand hygiene compliance rates. Integrating Soapy's technology into our hand hygiene training programs represents a new, fun way to show healthcare workers how to clean their hands effectively. This collaboration will not only enhance our training but will also contribute to creating safer healthcare environments across Pennsylvania."

Max Simonovsky, CEO of Soapy, also shared his excitement about the collaboration:

"We are honored to work alongside PA. Together, we aim to set a new standard for hand hygiene education in healthcare. Our technology is designed to make hand hygiene second nature to healthcare workers, significantly reducing the risk of infection spread and protecting the health of both patients and workers."

This partnership between PA DOH and Soapy marks a significant step forward in the fight against infectious diseases in healthcare settings. Through innovative technology and comprehensive education, Pennsylvania is leading the way in ensuring the health and safety of its healthcare workforce and their patients.
