Entrex is delighted to announce that Stephen H. Watkins, CEO of Entrex Florida Market, recently was featured in a Newsmax interview to discuss the substantial impact of Trump Tariffs on the private sector. The conversation, led by Newsmax Correspondent Caleb Parke, highlighted the positive effects these tariffs are having on U.S. businesses. (<https://entrex.link/NewsMax-25-04-02>)

Revitalizing the competitive landscape underscores the key role of the Entrex Florida Market initiatives in aligning Florida investors with local companies to enhance employment and economic growth.”

Stephen H. Watkins

During the interview, Mr. Watkins explained, "The Trump Tariffs have essentially leveled the playing field, allowing private U.S. businesses to compete fairly against foreign entities that previously enjoyed significant advantages in importing goods. This change has put U.S. businesses on equal footing, fostering a more competitive and equitable market."

Also contributing to the discussion was Fred Knight, whose insights complemented the overarching theme of the interview. Thomas Harblin, Partner at Entrex Florida Market, emphasized the broader economic implications, stating, "Creating an even playing field is crucial for our domestic suppliers and importers. It's not only fair but essential for the health of the U.S. employment base."

Mr. Watkins further elaborated on the broader economic benefits, "This revitalization of our competitive landscape justifies the expansion efforts of CEOs across the nation. It underscores the importance of our initiatives at Entrex Florida Market, which aim to synergize Florida investors with local corporations, thus driving employment and fostering economic growth within the state and nationally."

This interview sheds light on the positive economic initiatives spurred by the Trump Tariffs and reinforces Entrex Florida Market's commitment to promoting growth and fairness in the U.S. business environment.
