

FlightHelp.US Named by USA Today as One of 2025's Most Innovative Companies to Watch

NEW YORK CITY, NY, UNITED STATES, April 26, 2025 /EINPresswire.com/ -- FlightHelp.us, a rapidly growing travel disruption compensation platform founded by Irina Ciochiu, has been recognized by USA Today as one of 2025's most innovative companies to watch.

FlightHelp.us specializes in helping airline passengers claim financial compensation for flight delays, cancellations, missed connections, and other service disruptions. With a no-win, no-fee model, the company empowers travelers to enforce their rights without the complexity, cost, or frustration often associated with dealing directly with airlines.

Since its launch, FlightHelp.us has supported more than 150,000 passengers worldwide, leveraging consumer protection laws across jurisdictions such as the European Union, Canada, Brazil, and the United States. Passengers can file a claim through the platform in under two minutes by submitting flight details and proof of purchase. The company's legal and claims experts then advocate directly with airlines — and if necessary, pursue compensation through litigation.

"We are honored to be recognized by USA Today for our commitment to leveling the playing field for travelers," said Irina Ciochiu, founder of FlightHelp.us. "Too often, passengers give up when airlines deny legitimate claims or offer minimal settlements. Our mission is to simplify the process, educate consumers about their rights, and fight on their behalf — without any upfront costs."

FlightHelp.us continues to expand as more American travelers become aware of their eligibility for compensation under international and evolving domestic regulations. At a time when flight disruptions remain frequent, the company's consumer-first model offers a crucial resource for frustrated passengers seeking accountability and fair treatment.
