

A Soon-to-be-Released Tale of Dreams, Jinn, and a Girl Caught in Between

A new book is getting ready for release. It's called The Patron, written by Elizabeth Hassan. The story is about a girl named Layla whose life begins to change after she has a strange dream. In the dream, someone tells her, "You will marry a prince." That one sentence stays with her and leads her on a quiet and mysterious journey.

Layla is a young woman with wit and a sharp mind. As her life moves forward, fate seems to clear her path in its own strange way. A demon tries to play a trick on her, but in the end, fate plays the bigger joke. Years pass, people keep playing their own games, but Layla becomes the quiet and final winner—because Allah is on her side. With her calm strength and clever thinking, she walks through each test and shows her true power.

The story is not fast or full of action. Instead, it moves slowly, letting the reader feel what Layla is feeling. There are no big battles or loud magic. But there is something deeper happening. Layla begins to feel different. People around her start noticing it, too. Some become distant. Others begin to worry. She starts to wonder what is happening to her and why.

As the days go by, Layla becomes more curious. She starts looking for answers in books, in memories, and in quiet places. Along the way, the story touches on the idea of jinn—beings from old stories made of smokeless fire. These jinn are not loud or scary in the book. They are in the background, like a shadow or a soft whisper. They don't take over the story, but their presence adds a layer of mystery.

The book also explores how a person feels when they are stuck between two worlds—one that others can see, and one that only they can feel. Layla is not sure which world she belongs to. She feels lost at times, and that feeling grows as the story moves forward.

Elizabeth Hassan shared that this story means a lot to her. She wrote it over many years. For her, the book is not just about jinn or strange dreams. It's about being misunderstood, being different, and finding meaning in small moments. She said she wanted to write something that makes readers think quietly rather than giving them all the answers.

People who like quiet stories, where things unfold slowly and gently, may enjoy this book. It doesn't follow a straight path. It leaves space for the reader to pause and wonder. Every chapter moves like a soft step into Layla's mind and heart.
