Dr. José C. Salazar about to Cut the Ribbon of TTC's 1037 East Palmdale Boulevard Location

What we're opening today is not just a building—it is a blueprint for how we address the national crisis in substance use and mental health, one community at a time.”

Dr. José C. Salazar

The new Palmdale facility reflects Tarzana Treatment Centers' mission to provide accessible, integrated, and person-centered healthcare services for individuals experiencing substance use and mental health challenges. By integrating primary care with behavioral health and supportive housing services, TTC aims to reduce barriers to care and foster more stable, healthier communities.

At the ribbon-cutting ceremony, Dr. José C. Salazar, Director of Program Development and Contract Compliance at Tarzana Treatment Centers, thanked the DHCS Behavioral Health Continuum Infrastructure Program (BHCIP) and expressed gratitude to the community partners who helped bring the project to life. Special thanks were given to:

In addition to expressing gratitude, Dr. Salazar delivered inspiring remarks that framed the significance of the new site within a broader national context:

"What we're opening today is not just a building—it is a blueprint for how we address the national crisis in substance use and mental health, one community at a time," Dr. Salazar said. "At 1037 East Palmdale Blvd, we're integrating sobering services, outpatient substance use treatment, primary care, case management, mental health, and housing supports under one roof. This is the kind of whole-person care that too many people across the country still can't access. Today, Palmdale is showing what's possible when we connect the dots."

Dr. Salazar emphasized that the services launching at the site, such as CalAIM Enhanced Care Management, CalAIM Community Supports, Transitional Housing Programs (THP), integrated outpatient and primary care, and the newly established sobering center, represent the future of healthcare delivery.

"These aren't just individual services," he continued. "They form a continuum that meets people where they are and works collaboratively with them toward stability and health. This site is a microcosm of the systemic change we need nationwide."

The presence of local leadership underscored the vital role that partnerships between community organizations, government agencies, and healthcare providers play in creating innovative solutions to today's public health crises.

By seamlessly integrating services—from sobering support and outpatient behavioral healthcare to primary care and transitional housing—the 1037 East Palmdale Boulevard site is poised to become a model for community-based healthcare transformation.
