

Happy Father's Day - Training Sons to become responsible fathers

For Father's Day, make an effort to develop sons to become responsible fathers

LINDEN HIGHWAY, REGION 4, GUYANA, June 15, 2025 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Parents must make every effort to train their sons to become responsible fathers. Geary Reid, as a father and husband, strives to impart important lessons to parents, encouraging them to invest in the development of their sons and become responsible fathers.

Section A: Boyhood

During the stage of boyhood, each parent should understand that boys will experiment with many things, which will provide them with personal life experiences and teach various lessons. This is a critical stage for every parent to train and develop their sons. Imparting good values, morals, manners, and other key life skills to sons during the early phase of their lives is essential, as it sets a solid foundation for their future.

Boys need guidance. While external persons can provide some guidance, it is often good for them to receive advice from their parents and siblings. Parents usually recognize their children's strengths and weaknesses and know how to help them. Proper guidance and encouragement can lead to children quickly developing and, therefore, becoming valuable resources to their parents and society.

Educating boys is essential for ensuring that they play important roles in our societies in the future. Education is unbiased, so parents must ensure that their sons are properly educated consistently. Sports and games are also important for boys, as they learn to be disciplined and cooperate with others. Through sports, team spirit and accountability will be understood, and boys can apply these qualities to their relationships when they become husbands.

Parents must train their children to respect everyone. Boys may sometimes show resistance to this, but as parents constantly remind their sons, many of those boys will learn to respect everyone, and people will begin to talk about how mannerly they are.

Having a relationship with the Creator is important for both adults and children. The example set by parents in this regard is one that their children will likely follow. Many children go on to have a continuous relationship with the Creator and eventually take on major roles within religious institutions. Moral values must be taught within the home. Both boys and girls must learn some important moral lessons so that when they have their own families, they will be able to pass these values on to their families.

Most boys will learn about sex from schoolmates, neighbors, and other people, but the information they learn is sometimes incorrect. Therefore, parents must be one of the major teachers of sexual education within their homes. The experience that parents have is reasonable enough to guide their sons. Parents should guide their sons on being in a relationship, emphasizing that there are more important things than sex in a relationship. This guidance is especially important for boys of adolescent age. Family planning may be taught primarily to girls, but this practice needs to change, and both sons and daughters should become aware of family planning before entering into relationships.

Section B: Manhood

When sons move from boyhood to manhood, they have entered another important phase in their lives. They are expected to demonstrate many of the things that their parents taught them. There are some areas in which these men will still need to improve, since no parent can teach a child everything.

During this phase of manhood, men will put to the test the things they have learned from their parents and friends. Sometimes, they want to explore life. They are willing to take on new challenges, even if they fail. Gaining experience for oneself will include both failure and success. Those who want to be successful must be willing to try, rather than spending most of their time only thinking of what it may be like.

The money earned by men must be used wisely, so when they are ready to establish their own families, they have their portion of the money. To manage their finances effectively, people need to increase their earnings, make informed investments, and carefully control their spending. When men manage their money during their single life, they may be good stewards within their new family.

When a woman is looking for a companion, she may seek a man who knows how to perform domestic tasks. While she does not expect him to be the only person doing the domestic activities at home, at least his contribution will have a significant impact on the family. Men who were taught by their parents to be involved in domestic activities must make great use of those skills, which will help their family to have more time for love and laughter.

Finding a companion may not be as easy as finding a job. Those who are looking for companions must have values and seek those who have the potential to contribute to the growth of their family. There are many places to find a suitable companion. Once a person sees a companion and is reasonably satisfied with that individual, then it is time to consider marriage.

Section C: Fatherhood

Having a family is not a task for boys, but for men who are committed and want to make a positive contribution to their families and society. Some men are running away from family life, while others are running towards it. Not everyone knows that there is a great commitment for those who want to live with a companion and children.

Those men who are fathers are expected to be good fathers to their children. Every child wants a father who sets a good example for them to follow, and many children use their fathers as role models. Fathers must also be willing to take their children to the clinics, watch movies with them, and play with them. When fathers attend Parent-Teacher Association meetings, they send a positive message to teachers that they are interested in their children's educational development.

Protecting the family is a job entrusted to fathers, not to security companies, and the protection provided by fathers is more than just their physical strength. Women sometimes marry men because they need someone to protect them, and children love to know that they have a father who can protect them. Fathers and mothers can provide for the family. When fathers are the main source of financing for the family, they must be delighted to do so for their family.

Fathers must be firm yet gentle with their children, although children may not always appreciate their fathers being firm. When fathers are firm, it helps boys to desist from doing the wrong things and following people who will not contribute to their success.

Children must learn to respect their parents, friends, and neighbors. The respect shown to persons will cause those children to win friendships and give them great success. Parents, teach your children to respect everyone, and teach your sons to be responsible fathers so that their families will be happy in the future.
