Shoppers will enjoy finding unique pieces for their wardrobe, while buying with a purpose. Carefully curated global brands featuring clothing, accessories and jewelry for men and women will be offered. Feelin' Fine is the latest creation from LEL Foundation which focuses on employing people with disabilities to build job skills and career paths. Carrie Tackett, Executive Director at LEL Foundation says, "While there are many great boutiques in Indy, one thing that will set us apart is that we will employ staff with disabilities that have an interest in fashion and gaining retail experience with the hope of increasing their employment opportunities."

Many people with disabilities seek purposeful employment and connection in their community but continue to be an untapped resource for employers. Not only are individuals with disabilities employed in value-driven roles at Feelin' Fine, but they are also developing skills for a wider career path if desired. The LEL Foundation and Feelin' Fine are available to mentor other employers and offer resources to support the inclusion of meaningful employment opportunities for those with disabilities. Carrie Tackett shares, "Those in the disabilities community are often isolated and don't have opportunities to feel integrated and valued in their communities. By empowering them with job training and a chance to interact with the public, we raise awareness while normalizing their differences.”

Stop by Feelin’ Fine to pick something up for yourself or find that perfect gift that definitely will not be seen anywhere else in Indy!

The LEL Foundation was created in 2022 with the intention of expanding the work of LEL Home Services beyond those individuals it currently serves. The Foundation’s goals are based on the principles of Social Role Valorization, using it to create initiatives that give those with disabilities greater opportunities to live “the good life” such as through employment, building community or educating.
