“Moonlit Nites is a brand that we have been discussing for many years,” said Thomas Turner, Founder of Relentless Beats. “I've been listening to country music with my dad my whole life, and Arizona has such a rich history with country and western music—it's part of the soul of this place. With

Live music, dancing, great food and drinks, and a sense of community are what Harold's Cave Creek Corral has been known for since it first opened 90 years ago during the Great Depression. And while the world around Cave Creek's original "Wild West Saloon and Restaurant" has changed dramatically since then, Harold's has grown to become an iconic country western bar and restaurant and a popular stomping ground for locals and tourists alike. In celebration of this landmark anniversary, Harold's has a jam-packed schedule of events in October include a "Love Corral Dinner" for couples who met and fell in love at Harold's, a "History Fundraising Dinner" to benefit Cave Creek Museum, a "Big Out Back Honky-Tonk Dance Party" with Swing Country Arizona, and a full day of concerts featuring iconic local bands and an employee reunion.

ABOUT HAROLD'S CAVE CREEK CORRAL

As Cave Creek's original "Wild West Saloon and Restaurant," Harold's Cave Creek Corral is a landmark and popular stomping ground for both locals and tourists alike. With nine lore-filled decades of dining, entertainment, and fun, Harold's has a colorful, rich history. Longtime "Creekers" often reminisce about the restaurant's storied past, pointing out bullet holes in the walls of the bar as proof that things could often get rowdy in the old days. The restaurant walls are filled with photos of celebrities and memorabilia from movies that were filmed there, such as Rafferty and the Gold Dust Twins and Little Fauss and Big Halsey. Movie and television star Dick Van Dyke lived in the area for a time, and he would sometimes stop in and play the drums. Other celebrities who have visited Harold's include Dan Aykroyd, Walter Cronkite, Lou Rawls, and Miranda Lambert, just to name a few.

Open for breakfast, lunch, and dinner, Harold's is also known as a popular music venue for a variety of amazing local bands, such as Mogollon and Silver Sage. Over the years, Harold's expanded its outdoor venue to accommodate large-scale productions for national acts, including Craig Morgan, Rodney Atkins, and Roger Clyne and The Peacemakers. Guests can enjoy live music weekly, both inside and outside.

Harold's is also affectionately known as "Heinz Field West" and has grown to be one of the nation's largest Pittsburgh Steelers bars. On NFL game days, Harold's transforms from a cowboy bar into a sea of black and gold. People still talk about the four massive Steelers Super Bowl parties that Harold's hosted, with each game attracting more than 4,000 fans to the small town of Cave Creek.
