For multinational companies, the L-1 visa is not just an immigration tool — it's a business growth strategy”

Alexander Jovy

“The L-1 visa is one of the most powerful immigration tools available to international businesses,” said Alexander Jovy, Co-Managing Partner at Global Immigration Partners PLLC. “It allows companies to move leaders and specialists to the U.S. quickly and efficiently — helping them grow, innovate, and compete in the world’s largest economy.”

The L-1 Visa: A Gateway to U.S. Market Growth

The L-1 visa enables qualified employees of foreign companies to transfer to a U.S. branch, subsidiary, or affiliate. The program offers two key classifications:

L-1A Visa: For executives and managers overseeing key company functions or teams.

L-1B Visa: For employees possessing specialized knowledge of the company's operations, technology, or products.

Unlike other work visas, the L-1 category has no annual cap and supports dual intent, allowing visa holders to apply for permanent residence (Green Card) without disrupting their non-immigrant status.

Key Eligibility Highlights

The employee must have worked abroad for the qualifying company for at least one continuous year within the past three years.

The U.S. and foreign entities must maintain a qualifying relationship (parent, subsidiary, branch, or affiliate).

For new U.S. offices, the company must demonstrate operational viability, such as a physical location and business plan.

"Our corporate clients appreciate the flexibility the L-1 visa offers," explained Alexander Jovy, Co-Managing Partner at Global Immigration Partners PLLC. "It's not only a pathway to build U.S. operations — it's a long-term mobility strategy that aligns with global expansion goals."
